

ATLANTIC COUNTY SEAT REMOVAL WILL BE VOTED UPON

Long Debated Question to be Settled by Ballot at General Election in November.

After many years of agitation, the question of the removal of the County Seat from Mays Landing will be settled in November, when the people of the county will vote on whether or not it stays in Mays Landing or goes to Atlantic City.

The resolution adopted by the Atlantic County Board of Freeholders on Wednesday which will place the county seat removal question before the people for the vote is as follows:

"Whereas, a number of civic organizations have heretofore requested the Board of Freeholders of the County of Atlantic to pass a resolution putting to a vote the question of moving the county buildings and county seat from Mays Landing to Atlantic City.

"And whereas, said Board of Freeholders did not at that time feel like taking the initiative in so important a matter.

"And whereas, since that request heretofore made, petitions have been filed with the Board of Freeholders of this county, asking for a resolution to put the question to a vote, which petitions are signed by several thousand voters of said county.

"Now, Therefore, Be it Resolved, by the Board of Freeholders of the County of Atlantic that the County Seat of Atlantic County, New Jersey, be changed from Mays Landing in the municipality of Hamilton Township, Atlantic County, New Jersey, to Atlantic City, a municipality in the County of Atlantic and State of New Jersey.

"And be it further Resolved that the Clerk of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Atlantic County forthwith transmit a certified copy of this resolution to the Clerk of Atlantic County, New Jersey, notifying him that a vote of the people at the next general election is desired upon the question in accordance with the provisions of Article VI of Chapter 185, of an Act of the Legislature of New Jersey, entitled 'An Act Concerning Counties,' approved March 4, 1918, and to be found in P. L. of New Jersey, 1918, p. 507, et seq."

Previous to the passage of the resolution H. Walter Gill, president of the Atlantic City Kiwanis Club, which has sponsored the movement, spoke briefly.

He pointed out that 10,185 signatures had been secured for the petitions representing voters in all walks of life and including some of the largest tax payers in the county. He stated that according to information from County Clerk Parker there had been 28,082 voters registered at the last election, consequently but 5,617 signatures were necessary to compel the Freeholders to submit the question to a vote.

Frelinghuysen's Re-election to Senate Favored

A constituent writing from Hudson County, in expressing his commendation for the Senator's course at Washington has this to say:

"One who favored your election six years ago has stronger reasons today for favoring your re-election. This is said in the light of a critic and not of a blind partisan who favors you, 'right or wrong.' Your most powerful opponents, men who are financing campaigns against you, concede that you are absolutely honest, so there is no need of discussing that question, although its importance in a candidate for public office, cannot be over-estimated.

"In six years your handling of public questions has progressed so it is a matter of general information that you now rank favorably with the greatest statesmen of the age; so while we favored you six years ago because we know and had faith in you, we favor you now for the more important reason that the country needs you, and needs you badly.

"In Hudson there are few who think that proper senatorial timber should be qualified to perform in the tan bark under a circus tent. Circus performers have their place in the world but it is not in the Senate of the United States to vote on the making of our laws.

"We have not always agreed with you, and no one would reasonably expect to always agree with you, for you represent all of the people, not one, and you must reflect the views of the majority not the minority of your constituents.

"Although some times disagreeing with your views, we have known that you had better and first hand knowledge of the necessities of the occasion and that you were acting for the best interests of the country. You have not yielded to the hue and cry of those who would start a stampede on any subject so long as it would influence votes. This is a time for men with level heads, men who are opposed to radicalism to be in office—Americans for America.

"Of course, you will be nominated, and your opponent will endeavor to conjure up a so-called liquor question, to be the great issue of the parties. "There is no longer a liquor question. That has long been settled and neither you nor your opponent can unsettle it. The question is whether law is to be upheld. Would your opponents dare tell the truth before the people and say they oppose you because you intend to uphold the law? Certainly not—they fear the truth. The voters of this State will convince you that your conduct has been approved and that you are to be rewarded, not condemned, because you have upheld the law."

A special floating ball is used and the caddy wears a bathing suit in case the ball goes into the ocean, so that he can retrieve it. The next shot or stroke is played from the edge of the surf. This is claimed to be the first beach golf course to be constructed.

FIRST MEETING OF SOUTHERN SHORE DISTRICT OF N. J. SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The first meeting of the Southern Shore District of the New Jersey Sunday School Association was held in the M. E. Church last night under the direction of the president of this group, Mrs. Margaret Lippincott.

The speaker of the evening was Rev. Andrew Richards of New Greta, secretary-treasurer of the Association, who talked on the great need of the world today for more and better equipped Sunday Schools as a safeguard against crime and sin and how this could be accomplished by a teacher training school for this group, holding sessions once each week for a period of 24 weeks with efficient teachers in Bible study and child training. He said there was plenty of local material for teachers, if folks would become interested enough to want to learn at such a school. He gave statistics showing that in Ocean County alone there were over 17,000 people who never attend Sunday School. Other speakers were Rev. Daniel Johnson, Rev. R. A. Cake, Mr. John C. Price and Mr. Howard Holloway and others spoke on the particular need of their school.

Five Sunday Schools of the district were represented.

As a climax two beautiful solos were rendered by Mrs. Howard Holloway of West Creek and a friend, Miss Maude Sutton of Philadelphia. Miss Sutton is a vocal teacher and her song on the Prodigal Son entitled "The Penitent" by Beardsley Van deWater was much appreciated. Mrs. Holloway is always appreciated by everyone.

No Giberson Arrest Near Parker Says

Toms River, N. J., Aug. 22.—Contradicting the statement earlier in the day of Prosecutor Wilfred H. Jayne, Burlington county detective, Ellis Parker of Mount Holly, said today that there would be no arrests in the Giberson murder case for a week. He said that he was engaged in running down a number of clues, in towns other than Philadelphia and New York.

Parker had a three-hour conference with Prosecutor Jayne at the courthouse this afternoon. At its conclusion Parker said to the newspaper men:

"The case is deeper than we realized at first. We have by no means completed our investigations, in other towns than in New York and Philadelphia. We are seeking, but so far without success, some person who might have heard Giberson mention some one who had a grudge against him, or with whom he might at some time have had a serious quarrel. There is no question in my mind but that the murder was committed by some person in whom Giberson had absolute faith and confidence. The chloroform found in the house and which Mrs. Giberson explained was purchased for cleaning a dress, has been checked up by us and found to be absolutely true."

THE BIG MUSKEG

By VICTOR ROUSSEAU

He seemed to tremble at her words. He turned fiercely upon her. "To Scotland!" he shouted. "I'm done with this country. A man's thoughts turn to his old age to his homeland. To Aberdeen!"

Molly was awed by the old man's fanatical enthusiasm. "When shall we go?" she asked.

"This autumn, lass—before the snows fall. But—" he clutched her by the arm—"ye'll say nought about it?"

"But you must arrange with the company for a new factor, and, if he isn't trained—"

His clutch became convulsive. "Not a word!" he cried fiercely. "Haven't I done well by the company? It won't be the sufferer. If they thought I was going away they'd—not a word, lass! Promise me! Molly, lass, ye winna go back on me now?"

"No, I won't go back on you," she answered.

But she did not like the idea of stealing away, although the company would suffer little. And then there would be the forfeiture of his pension. But she dared not bring up that subject in view of his evident obsession.

After a while they began to make preparations. They spoke of the journey as being weeks, instead of months away. Then came a night when the factor tapped at Molly's door. She dressed quickly and went out of her room, to see the whole skyline ablaze. Clouds of smoke were whirling down on them. Suddenly a rig with two

through the smoke clouds. But as they approached the girl she drew herself away.

"It's not true!" she cried. "The fire's on the other side. Why should you come for us?"

"I tell you you'll be burned to a cinder inside of fifteen minutes!" yelled Chambers. "We've got no time to waste. We're going to drive you out of danger. Come along!"

"I won't come!" cried Molly. "Don't go with them, father. He's not speaking the truth! Look at his face!"

Hackett pushed Chambers out of his way and strode up to the door. "I guess that's true enough, what you said, Miss McDonald," he said. "The fire ain't this side—but Will Carruthers is dying. They pulled him out of his shack. He's in a bad way. Maybe he'll just live till morning. He's calling for you."

"Will—Will burned?" gasped Molly, looking at him with eyes of horror.

"It's gospel truth!" cried Chambers. "He can't rest till you go to him."

"Then why did you tell us an untruth?" asked the girl, searching his face as if to read to the bottom of his soul.

"Because we wanted to break it gently," shouted Hackett. He seized her by the arm. "We haven't no time to waste!" he shouted. "He may die any minute while we're talking here."

"He didn't send you," cried Molly with sudden conviction. "Why should he have sent you? We won't go! You're lying! Let me go!"

She pushed her father back into the store and tried to bolt the door in their faces, but they set their shoulders against it and broke through.

Molly ran to her room; they were there almost as soon as she. She screamed. She heard McDonald's feeble shout cut off as Chambers grasped him by the throat. And then she was struggling madly in Hackett's arms.

"Curse you!" he shouted, with a string of vile oaths, seizing her by the hair and dashing his fist into her face.

She fought back like a tigress, broke from him, and snatching up the water-pitcher, smashed it across his head, cutting his face with the fragments of porcelain. He grasped her by the throat. She clung to the bed, the table, to the door, screaming the while until his fingers tightened on her throat and the room swam blackly around her.

She was faintly conscious of a gag thrust into her mouth, of being carried, struggling, out of the store, of being lifted into the rig. Then she revived to find herself huddled upon the floor, her father bending over her with his wrists tied, and mumbling in her ear. The engineer, seated in front of them, was driving furiously along the trail southward. Hackett, with one leg thrust out on either side of the vehicle, was wiping the blood from his face.

Desperate as she was, Molly would have tried to leap from the rig but for her father. She heard him continue mumbling; and at length the meaning of his words reached her brain, and the horror of them numbed her and repressed all thought of fighting.

"It'll be all right, my lass," the old man was muttering. "They won't hurt ye no more. They're taking us to Tom Bowyer. I reckon. He's bested us. We'll have to give in. We'll make the most of it."

The old man shook with fear, but he laid his hand caressingly upon her head. And afterward Molly recalled that gesture, and remembered that it was his right one.

At the time she thought nothing. She lay back with her head against the seat, resolved to husband her strength for a more desperate struggle later, if need be. Her dress was rent, her hair fell to her waist. Rain had begun to fall; the horses, lashed incessantly, tore madly through the darkness, and the rig swayed dangerously from side to side.

Molly's thoughts ran on as fiercely. They were taking her to Bowyer, then! But Bowyer was at Cold Junction, and surely he could not harm her there! And he was taking her father. She must remain at his side and protect him. She sat passively upon the floor, hearing the frenzied babbling of the old man, and soothing him with one hand stretched out upon his.

But this was not the way to Cold Junction. This led toward Chain of Lakes, where several fishing clubs had purchased ground and water rights and set up camps. Her heart sank. She caught at Hackett's arm.

"Where are you taking us?" she pleaded. "Won't you let us go back? I'll say nothing if you let us go—I'll say nothing!"

Hackett grinned at her and tried to put his arm about her. She struck out at him, and, with an oath, he pushed her back violently into the bottom of the rig.

She gathered all her courage to wait. And the waiting was not long. The upland was surmounted, and a lake came into sight, a neck of land, and the dark outlines of camp buildings upon it. A light showed in a window. Chambers pulled up the horses.

He leaped to the ground and, catching McDonald by the arm, pulled him roughly out of the vehicle. He hammered fiercely upon the door, which opened. Tom Bowyer appeared on the threshold. The factor began to tremble. Bowyer pulled him unceremoniously inside.

"Bring her in!" he yelled to Hackett. The outlaw caught Molly by the waist and swung her to the ground. She tried to break from him, but Bowyer, having thrust McDonald inside, snatched her from Hackett's grasp and, picking her up bodily, carried her into the lighted room.

Bowyer deposited the girl on the divan, went out and pushed McDonald in after her. Outside Molly heard a fierce altercation in progress—Bowyer's threatening tones, Hackett's sullen answers and Lee Chambers' querulous whine.

Presently the two men went out and Molly heard the horses being led away. She tried to adjust her torn dress, to fasten up her hair. Bowyer came back.

"Now we'll have a few words to gether," he said, leaning at Molly.

CHAPTER XIII.

Wilton carried the dead man into his room and laid the body on the bed. His face was set like flint. In this he traced the work of Bowyer; but the tool, Lee Chambers, was the object of his immediate vengeance.

Before anything else he must discover the motive of the burglary.

He opened the safe, which he had shut, and went through the papers very deliberately. He was astonished to find that everything appeared intact and just as he had left it.

Wilton could not understand it. He tried to figure it out. He had already come to the conclusion that the fire had been started with the purpose of drawing himself and those in the vicinity away from the office, while the burglary was being committed. But why had it failed? And what had Chambers been after?

He must have known that there was no money in the safe. The men's pay came up monthly by special messenger.

She pushed her father back into the store and tried to bolt the door in their faces, but they set their shoulders against it and broke through.

Molly ran to her room; they were there almost as soon as she. She screamed. She heard McDonald's feeble shout cut off as Chambers grasped him by the throat. And then she was struggling madly in Hackett's arms.

"Curse you!" he shouted, with a string of vile oaths, seizing her by the hair and dashing his fist into her face.

She clung to the bed, the table, to the door, screaming the while until his fingers tightened on her throat and the room swam blackly around her.

She was faintly conscious of a gag thrust into her mouth, of being carried, struggling, out of the store, of being lifted into the rig. Then she revived to find herself huddled upon the floor, her father bending over her with his wrists tied, and mumbling in her ear. The engineer, seated in front of them, was driving furiously along the trail southward. Hackett, with one leg thrust out on either side of the vehicle, was wiping the blood from his face.

Desperate as she was, Molly would have tried to leap from the rig but for her father. She heard him continue mumbling; and at length the meaning of his words reached her brain, and the horror of them numbed her and repressed all thought of fighting.

"It'll be all right, my lass," the old man was muttering. "They won't hurt ye no more. They're taking us to Tom Bowyer. I reckon. He's bested us. We'll have to give in. We'll make the most of it."

The old man shook with fear, but he laid his hand caressingly upon her head. And afterward Molly recalled that gesture, and remembered that it was his right one.

At the time she thought nothing. She lay back with her head against the seat, resolved to husband her strength for a more desperate struggle later, if need be. Her dress was rent, her hair fell to her waist. Rain had begun to fall; the horses, lashed incessantly, tore madly through the darkness, and the rig swayed dangerously from side to side.

Molly's thoughts ran on as fiercely. They were taking her to Bowyer, then! But Bowyer was at Cold Junction, and surely he could not harm her there! And he was taking her father. She must remain at his side and protect him. She sat passively upon the floor, hearing the frenzied babbling of the old man, and soothing him with one hand stretched out upon his.

But this was not the way to Cold Junction. This led toward Chain of Lakes, where several fishing clubs had purchased ground and water rights and set up camps. Her heart sank. She caught at Hackett's arm.

"Where are you taking us?" she pleaded. "Won't you let us go back? I'll say nothing if you let us go—I'll say nothing!"

Hackett grinned at her and tried to put his arm about her. She struck out at him, and, with an oath, he pushed her back violently into the bottom of the rig.

She gathered all her courage to wait. And the waiting was not long. The upland was surmounted, and a lake came into sight, a neck of land, and the dark outlines of camp buildings upon it. A light showed in a window. Chambers pulled up the horses.

He leaped to the ground and, catching McDonald by the arm, pulled him roughly out of the vehicle. He hammered fiercely upon the door, which opened. Tom Bowyer appeared on the threshold. The factor began to tremble. Bowyer pulled him unceremoniously inside.

"They can't open the safe," said Wilton. "At least, there's only one man can, and he's been at it already. No, never mind what I mean! I don't want bloodshed. I'll open it and show it to them." He turned to one of the engineers. "Take four men with you and hurry to the store and see that no harm comes to Miss McDonald and her father," he ordered. "And take this," he added, picking the revolver out of the drawer and handing it to him.

"You'd better come too, Mr. Carruthers," the man suggested.

"No, I'll stay here," said Wilton. "Hurry!"

The engineer picked four men and they hurried down the road. Andersen and two others remained with Wilton. Hardly had the party left when the mob came streaming out of the bunk-houses toward the office, shouting and yelling.

"Seeing the four men standing in the doorway, however, they hesitated to rush them, probably in the belief that they were armed, and stood off, cursing them.

"Speak up!" shouted Wilton. "What is it you men want?"

The shouts died away to a muttering. A spokesman stepped forward.

"We want the money in the safe, and we'll have it!" he shouted. "We all know you set the fire because the line's busted, and you've got the safe chock-full of money. You've worked us like dogs all summer, and now you're going to lay us off because the company's busted. You'd better hand it over."

Evidently somebody had been telling the men that tale.

"There's no money in the safe," he answered. "Send a deputation of three men and you can examine it."

The Hunkies, who for the most part understood him very well, looked at one another uncertainly. They were as docile as lambs without leadership. But they had a leader; the outlaw Tongway stepped forward out of the crowd.

"Come along, boys, he's fooling you!" he yelled. "Smash his head for him! Give them what's coming to them!"

But he slunk back into their midst as the following mob rushed forward. Wilton noticed that he was fingering a revolver in his coat pocket. He waited till the mob was close upon the shack. He had calculated that an instant's hesitation would follow, seized it and sprang into their midst, striking out right and left and felling a drunken laborer at every blow. As Tongway fumbled desperately with the trigger of the weapon in his pocket, Wilton dealt him a smashing blow that knocked him senseless. He stooped, took the revolver and turned and faced his assailants.

"Now, men," he said crisply. "I've told you that you shall examine the safe, and I'll keep my word. Three of you enter. The rest will wait outside."

After a pause three of the workmen came forward uncertainly. Wilton took them inside the shack, opened the safe door and took out the contents, package by package.

"Satisfied there's no money?" he asked.

"I guess that's so," admitted the leader of the men, reluctantly.

"Then get out," said Wilton, driving them toward the door.

The three rejoined their companions and, with sullen mutterings, the workmen lurched away aimlessly, and totally unable to unite on any further plan for aggression now that their leader was gone. Andersen and one of the engineers picked up Tongway and brought him into the shack. The man was still unconscious. However, he showed signs of coming to shortly.

"Jules is dead," said Wilton quietly. "Jules dead?" shouted Andersen. "Murdered. It was Lee Chambers. He must have been hanging round the camp. He got into the safe, too, but was scared away before he took anything. Come inside!"

At the sight of the dead man on the bed Andersen swore softly.

"He must have been with those two liquor peddlers," said Andersen. "I guess they set the fire, all right."

"I guess they did," said Wilton. "And I want you to go on to the next camp and telephone in to Clayton and get the police up here right away."

"I done it, Mr. Carruthers," said Andersen. "You see, sir, just as soon as the fire began I seen that gasoline on the engine sheds. And I'd heard the men talking, because I picked up a little of their language. I knew there was trouble coming, and I phoned Mr. Quain. He said he'd get an engine and come right up with some of his men."

"Well done!" said Wilton. "We'll have this man for them, at any rate. Tongway stirred, muttered and suddenly sat up on the floor, looking at his captors in bewilderment. Wilton quietly took the revolver out of his pocket and walked toward him.

"I'm going to ask you a few questions, Tongway," he remarked in a casual tone. "You'll find it to your advantage to answer them. Who sent you here?"

Tongway broke into a short laugh. "You 'ink dey tell that to me?" he sneered. "Jim Hackett don't tell me nothings. He say you got de job—you do it!"

"You came with Hackett; but what was the game? You were told to sell liquor round the camp and make the workmen drunk and discontented. I guess you have an idea whom you were working for, besides Jim Hackett, eh, Tongway?"

"Mebbe I do," muttered the outlaw. "I guess you shoot me unless I say Mr. Bowyer, eh?"

The parry was effective. "You came here with Hackett and Lee Chambers to fire the camp," said Wilton. "Lee Chambers' job was to steal papers from the safe while we were fighting the fire. You were going to meet somewhere afterward. Where was it?"

The man burst into scornful laughter. "You don't bluff me," he jeered.

"Come along, boys, he's fooling you!" he yelled. "Smash his head for him! Give them what's coming to them!"

But he slunk back into their midst as the following mob rushed forward. Wilton noticed that he was fingering a revolver in his coat pocket. He waited till the mob was close upon the shack. THE SANDMAN STORY

OLD RABBIT'S ADVICE

YOUNG JACK RABBIT came running into the house where he lived all out of breath. "I got away. He didn't catch me this time," he said, sitting down on the floor near Grandpa Rabbit's chair.

"Who was chasing you, Mr. Dog or Mr. Man?" asked Grandpa.

"Oh, it was Mr. Dog," answered Jack. "I went up to the farm to get a bit of lettuce and Mr. Dog was running through the garden taking a short cut home, for it was his dinner time, when he happened to catch sight of me sitting under the cabbage."

"I had my eye on him, though, and I had a good start and here I am, safe under so they had to jump over it, and then I saw I had them."

"You see, while they were leaping over one way I ran under the gate again and by the time they were on that side I was on the other. They just couldn't catch me and I knew I would not get as tired running back and forth under the gate as they would get tired out after a while and I could escape."

Little Jack Rabbit was so interested right here that he forgot and interrupted Grandpa. "Did they catch you?" he asked.

"Well, here I am telling you the story," said Grandpa, "and if those fellows had caught me you never would have heard it."

"No, I was lucky, for nobody came along and back and forth they jumped over the gate, and back and forth I went under it, and then all at once one of those dogs caught his foot as he went over and tumbled, and when the other dog landed he fell on top of him, and that was my chance, while they were rolling on the ground."

"I ran and hid far under a pile of boards by the roadside until it was safe to go home, and you remember, if ever you are cornered and there is a fence or a wall you can crawl under or through, to just tire out Mr. Dog, for he will have to jump, and jumping back and forth is tiresome."

Little Jack Rabbit said he would, but he hoped he would never be cornered as Grandpa was and have two Mr. Dogs after him.

and sound. I guess he is pretty angry, for he didn't catch me and he will be late for his dinner."

"I know you are a good runner, Jack," said Grandpa Rabbit, "but let me tell you a trick I once played on two dogs that were chasing me and I was too far from home to take a chance on a run. You may need this same trick some day, so listen to what I am going to tell you."

As the Editor Sees It

Safety First

The trouble is with auto drivers who read about accidents to other people, do not look on those accidents as lessons they should apply to themselves. You talk to the auto drivers and in almost every case they appear to believe they are immune from the same mishaps they read about. It's difficult for a man to see himself in the same predicament as another. To the average person a narrow escape from accident is only an incident. It usually brings no concern about the possibility of something of the same kind occurring again, with more serious results. One cannot always be lucky. Something is sure to happen if carelessness is indulged in. It's just as easy to be careful as it is to be careless, and it's a lot healthier and far less expensive. Sizing it all up and preaching as strong a sermon as we know how to preach, we put it in these two words—Play safe!

Making Us The Goat

England is talking about canceling the debt owed to her by France. And we have right here in this country some people who argue that it is a noble example, and that the United States should follow the same course, and cancel the debts England owes us. It is a sort of chain affair. England forgives France, we forgive England. But the joke is that there is no one to forgive us. We're left holding the hot potato. We lent Europe money, and it came out of Liberty Bonds. A lot of those bonds are held right here in Tuckerton. When those bonds mature we're going to have to pay them off if England doesn't. Which means that citizens of this community—of every community in the United States for that matter—are not apt to applaud any proposition that carries debt cancellation.

celling with it. We furnished money to prosecute the war—and then we sent over enough men to win it. Now we are entitled to the money we loaned—and we'll be a lot of suckers if we don't get it.

Crop Conditions
 The basis of American prosperity is agriculture. When the fields and the forests, the flocks and the herds are producing, new wealth is being created from the soil, the source of all wealth. When they are not producing, the people must live on what has been produced until a new crop can be planted, harvested and distributed.

According to the Department of Agriculture, our crops this year will be ample for prosperity. The July report on winter wheat gave an estimate of 569,000,000 bushels against a total of 587,000,000 in 1921. The spring crop in northwestern states will have a bumper yield per acre and the total will be higher than last year. The prospects for European demand for wheat are good. Outside of Russia, Europe will produce between 20,000,000 and 100,000,000 bushels of wheat less than last year. What Russia will have no one can say. But with this shrinkage in production and with Canada producing her biggest crop since 1915, the American farmer is in good position to supply not only all domestic needs but most of the foreign demands as well.

The corn crop is in good condition and promises a yield of some three billion bushels. The oat crop is poor; the hay crop is large and the amount of dairy products being produced and held in storage is large. Fruit generally is in good shape, and a record-breaking crop in many sections is reported. Americans have no reason for looking on the dark side any longer.

The man who gets married four times makes a good husband. Toward the last he gets to be a pretty good dishwasher.

We overheard a Tuckerton man say yesterday that every time he thinks of the coal strike he puts moth balls in his winter underwear.

In Detroit a man struck a match to look at his auto gas tank. Now he's learning to read with his fingers.

Doubtless you've noticed that Tuckerton Citizen who thrusts himself forward generally comes out behind.

The average Tuckerton woman's ambition is to look as well as she thinks she looks.

Still another trouble about getting rich quick is you may get caught a good deal quicker.

It's a good deal better to "Stop, Look and Listen" than to speed, stall and hear the angles.

Ever notice that about the time you get used to a straw hat it's too dirty to wear any longer?

If the average Tuckerton man had to spend a whole day as a telephone operator he'd change his mind about how the exchange ought to be run.

A compromise is when a man lets his wife have what she wants if she will shut up.

The trouble with this country is too many politicians are making "keynote speeches" when they ought to be at home reading bedtime stories.

A fashion writer asks in a daily paper lying on our desk: "Why do men wear coats in summer?" Generally it is to hide the biggest part of a dirty shirt.

what he reads in the paper borrows the paper he does read from his neighbor.

Some of our Tuckerton girls once worried about a hole in the toe of their stockings. Now they worry about a hole in the knee.

A Georgia judge has ruled that flatirons are deadly weapons. It's easy to guess whether that judge is married or single.

In the life of a Tuckerton boy the saddest words of tongue or pen are "When does school take up again?"

ALWAYS TIRED NO AMBITION

Nervous and Dizzy, Everything Seemed to Worry Me. How I Got Well

Larwill, Indiana.—"My back was so bad I could not do my washing. I was all the time dazed and nervous and everything seemed to worry me and I had awful pains in my right side. I felt badly about four years and could not do my work as it should have been done. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised so much and it did so many people good that I began to take it myself. I am feeling fine now and every one tells me they never saw me looking so well. I live on a farm, do all my work, and have three little girls to take care of. I am recommending this medicine to my friends and know it will help them if they use it like I do." — Mrs. HANNAH LONG, R. R. 3, Box 7, Larwill, Indiana.

Many women keep about their work when it is a great effort. They are always tired out and have no ambition. When you are in this condition give it prompt attention.

Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it is especially adapted to correct such troubles, as it did for Mrs. Long.

Contemporary Corrected.

Where Feudalism Survives

One of Bhutan's "Castles in the Air"—Tongsa Jong.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

Though the feudalism of the Middle Ages has disappeared from the western world, it is in full flower in Bhutan, just over the northeastern border of India on the southern slope of the Himalayas. The main road to Lhasa, the capital of Tibet, and the route followed in recent attempts to scale Mt. Everest runs just along the western edge of this almost unknown country.

Ridge after ridge of the world's highest mountains run southward from the Himalayas, and over these gigantic ranges and valleys is spread Bhutan, an area about equal to that of West Virginia. Some of the Bhutanese peaks attain altitudes up to 24,000 and 25,000 feet. From this roof of the world flow great turbulent rivers which would prove a joy to non-technical lovers of nature, but almost a sorrow to engineers, for in them millions of potential horse-power are running to waste. The nearest approach to power utilization is in the few Buddhist prayer-wheels set up beside some of these streams that prayers may be reeled off mechanically.

In contrast to the sky-piercing peaks, clad in eternal snow, are the deep valleys, and to the southward the low plains of Bhutan, where in the damp, over-powering heat grow dense jungles of palms, ferns and bamboos. Between the two extremes are magnificent grazing grounds in the higher plateaus, high pine forests, rhododendrons, magnolias, chestnuts and oaks.

In eastern Bhutan the hills are densely clothed with forests, but have practically no population, as the region is too fever-stricken to allow of any one living there. These hills are, however, the haunt of almost every kind of wild animal—elephant, rhino, tiger, leopard, bison, mythun, sambar, cheetah, hog-deer, barking deer, etc. The river beds are full of runs leading to the various salt-licks which occur in the hills.

It is an ideal place for shooting, but not easy to follow game, owing to the extreme steepness of the sandstone cliffs. The elephant in its wild state can go over or down nearly anything, and one tuskier in escaping a hunting party of Europeans was found to have gone up a precipice 30 feet high at an angle very little short of perpendicular.

Mules Are Fed Raw Eggs.

All transportation in Bhutan is on the backs of animals, and a queer array of two and four-footed creatures it is, ranging from coolies at one end of the scale to pack-sheep at the other and including elephants, mules, donkeys, ponies, yaks and oxen. Mules are the stand-by for use on the mountain trails, and the Bhutanese manage to keep them in good condition despite their strenuous employment. Whether their odd custom of feeding the mules a concentrated emergency ration of raw eggs has anything to do with the good condition of the pack animals is not clear; certainly there are few sights queerer than that of Bhutanese mule tenders, just before a strenuous climb, breaking eggs like an American soda-water vander, dumping them into a horn, and pouring them down the throats of the animals.

One of the most distinctive things about Bhutan is its architecture. Religion and war have been the chief factors in molding it. Most of the villages or towns are citadels or forts and monasteries combined. And they are truly "castles in the air"—huge piles usually perched on some dominating ridge or cliff brink or against the side of a seemingly unattainable precipice. One striking architectural feature is that all the walls have a distinct slope inward as they rise. The observer wonders where this form of architecture came from; whether it came from this remote and inaccessible region in the Himalayas through the Akkadians, Babylonians, Assyrians and Persians from Egypt or whether the center from which the art spread was founded by a race which had its habitat somewhere in Asia.

Not many years ago Bhutan was the scene of seemingly unending wars and raids between factions of its turbulent hillmen. It was ruled jointly by a religious and lay ruler. Since 1907 it has become a kingdom and peace seems to have settled upon it. Many a jungle hillside has given way to rice fields and tea gardens.

Bhutan's feudal system is very close in many ways to that of medieval Europe. The nobles live in castle-forts with large groups of retainers. Some of these till the fields while others carry on industries necessary for the maintenance of the establishment. In the "factory wings" of some of the great castles many girls and women are kept busy weaving silk, wool, and cotton fabrics. Men make excellently tempered swords and other weapons from charcoal iron, and others engage in gold and silversmith's work. In the monasteries bells and images are cast from metals.

Their swords are very handsome weapons, with finely finished blades, elaborately wrought, silver-handled, inlaid with turquoise and coral, and silver scabbards with gold-washed patterns, attached to handsome leather belts with brightly colored silk cords and tassels. Their daggers are also very fine, many of them with triangular blades and fluted sides with sheaths of exquisite open silver and gold work set with turquoise.

The monasteries possess an art which is probably peculiar to Bhutan. They make most beautiful needlework pictures of the saints on hanging banners. Innumerable pieces of colored silks and brocades are applied in a most artistic manner with elaborate stitches of all kinds. Many of them are veritable works of art.

Another industry in which the Bhutanese excel is basket-work and fine matting, made from split cane. The baskets are beautifully woven of very finely split cane and some of the lengths are colored to form a pattern. They are made in two circular pieces, rounded top and bottom, and the two pieces fit so closely and well that they can be used to carry water. They are from 6 to 15 inches in diameter, and the Bhutanese use them principally to carry cooked rice and food. They also make much larger and stronger baskets, very much in the shape of a mule-pannier, and these are used in a similar way for pack animals.

Why Their Work Is Excellent.

Possibly the excellence of the work produced in Bhutan owes much to the feudal system which still prevails there. Each penop and jonguen has his own workmen among his retainers, men who are not paid by the piece and are not obliged either to work up to time or to work at all if the spirit is not in them, and consequently they put their souls into what they do, with the result that some pieces of splendid individuality and excellent finish are still made. No two pieces are quite alike, and each workman leaves his impress on his work.

If Bhutan is ever opened up as a resort for sightseers America's Grand canyon and its Yosemite valley may have to look to their laurels. The gorge of the Tchin-chu is bordered by stupendous cliffs of the most weird shapes, among the lowest of which El Capitan of the Yosemite would be dwarfed. The towering rocks are cleft in numberless places from top to bottom, leaving narrow slits or fissures, some of which are said to be a mile or more long.

The Bhutanese men are fine, tall, well-developed, with an open, honest cast of face, and the women are comely, clean and well dressed and excellent housekeepers and managers. Their religion is Buddhism and their language a dialect of Tibetan. The population of Bhutan is about 400,000. The clothes of the higher officials are always immaculate, their brocades and silks fresh and unstained in any way, and even the coolies are a great contrast to the usual Tibetan or Darjeeling coolie. A great part of the country is under cultivation, and they raise sufficient crops to support the whole population, including the lamas. As the lamas in Bhutan are fed, clothed and housed at state expense, and as their numbers have steadily increased, they have become a very heavy burden.

Maternal Responsibility.

A friend of the family happened to be at the house when the baby cried, and watched Pauline interestedly as she tried to quiet the infant.

"He's a nice little brother to have, isn't he?" she smiled.

Pauline replied, "O, he may be all right when he grows up, but I think he'll be an awful hard baby for me to raise."

Geophone Aid in Mine Disasters

Instrument Developed During World War Has Been Perfected by Engineers.

EXPERIMENTS PROVE VALUE

Detects Subterranean Sounds at Great Distance—Has Many Uses, but Its Advantage in Mine Rescue Work Most Important.

Washington.—As the result of experiments made by the bureau of mines, the geophone, a novel instrument used amid the reek and slaughter of the World war for the detection of earth and rock sounds, made in the construction of military mines and tunnels, promises to become an active factor in the saving of the lives of miners entombed as the result of fires and explosions.

In the course of tests conducted in the bureau's experimental coal mine near Pittsburgh, blows with a sledge on the coal face were heard, by means of the geophone, at a distance of 650 feet, with various rooms and entries intervening. On a suspended pipe line, light hammering with the knuckles was detected at a distance of 1,500 feet. Ordinary talking and singing could be detected through 150 feet of solid coal. By the use of two geophones, one instrument to each ear, it is possible to determine the direction from which a sound is coming, and thus to locate the approximate position of the entombed miner.

Another promising use of the geophone is in the location of leaks in water pipes. By means of the instrument, it is possible to hear water circulating in the pipes of ordinary city mains situated ten to fifteen feet below the surface. Tests conducted at a busy corner in the downtown district of Pittsburgh located a leak in a water main which the water company had sought to detect for two weeks vainly.

Sensitive, but Simple.

The mine geophone is sensitive, yet extremely simple and easily portable. The instrument was invented by the French during the war to detect sapping and underground mining operations. It was developed by the United States engineers, and the instruments now used by the bureau of mines were made according to plans drawn by them, except for the introduction of different diaphragms. The geophone is essentially a small seismograph, as it embodies the same principles as the ponderous apparatus that records earthquake tremors. It really consists of a lead weight suspended between two elastic diaphragms cutting across a small airtight box. If the instrument is placed on the ground and any one is pounding or digging in the vicinity, energy is transmitted as wave motion to the earth, and the earth waves shake the geophone case. The geophone, therefore, transforms the earth wave into an air wave, which is heard by the ear as sound, and at the same time magnifies the wave so that the sound is louder than if the ears were placed in direct contact with the earth.

The observations of the bureau of mines indicate that the geophone should be quite useful in the location of mine fires. Usually a mine fire makes enough noise, either by drawing air or by breaking off slate and coal, to be heard for a considerable distance through the coal, and even through the strata above. The distance that these sounds can be heard depends a great deal on the nature of the strata above the mine, yet the sounds originating at a mine fire should be detected through 100 to 300 feet of cover and through 500 to 800 feet of coal.

Aids Mine Engineering.

Geophones supply a quick and fairly accurate method of mine surveying. If two tunnels are being brought together from any direction, the progress of the tunnels could be observed by means of the geophones, and their relative positions determined.

Another application of the possibilities of the instrument in mine surveying is in the prevention of accidents in blasting through. If two tunnels are approaching each other, or are passing a short distance apart, it is necessary to determine the relative location in order that men may be warned to keep away from the point of danger. As the sounds transmitted through the geophone are so characteristic, frequent observation would enable a trained observer to follow the progress of the work in the opposite tunnel. He would thus be able to tell when blasts were to be fired.

No attempt has been made to adapt the geophone to determine the earth movements that sometimes occur in deep mines and are termed "bumps" by the miners. It is probable, however, that this instrument may be of use in certain parts of the anthracite coal fields, where cave-ins have destroyed mine workings, causing loss of life, surface subsidence and injury and destruction of buildings.

The manifest advantage of the geophone for use in mine rescue work has led the bureau of mines to place the instrument on its mine-rescue cars, which are constantly being called to assist in the succor of entombed men at mine fires and explosions.

Sage's Influence Strong in China

Teachings of Confucius Still Remain the Moral Guide for People of Vast Domain.

ANCIENT TOMB IS NEGLECTED

Interest Directed to the Great Chinese Sage by Dispute Among Descendants Who Inherit Duty of Caring for Shrine.

Washington.—The tomb of Confucius, the mecca to which millions of Chinese pilgrims have journeyed, is said by dispatches to be covered with weeds due to a dispute between descendants of the great sage, who have inherited the duty of caring for this shrine of the nation.

The burial place of the man who has dominated Chinese thought for 25 centuries is described, as it appeared a few years ago, in the following communication from Charles K. Edmunds to the National Geographic society: "This Confucian temple, an enormous and magnificent place, occupying with its grounds the whole of one side of the town of Kufu, is the model of the Confucian temples found in all the cities of China. It is almost certainly the growth of ages.

Contains Image of Sage. "Within the main building, called 'The Hall of Perfection,' sits the canopied image of the great sage, of which there are not more than two or three duplicates throughout the empire. Ordinarily, Confucian temples do not contain an image of the sage, but a simple tablet before which veneration and devotions are expressed.

"The statue is of wood, larger than life size, and represents the sage seated, holding in his hands the imperial tablet, or scepter, as a symbol of his sovereignty in the realm of thought.

"He is clothed in nine different silk garments, on which the 12 imperial emblems are embroidered, namely, sun, moon, stars, mountains, dragons, pheasants, altar vessels, water lilies, flames of fire, rice, axes and classic

When they were delivered to him in sixteen certificates of 100,000 each he found, by examining the rate of exchange at the present time, that the "fortune" was worth just $3.20. Before the war this amount would have been worth $800,000.

CROPS ALL GOOD

Western Canada Farmers Jubilant Over Prospects.

Harvest in Southwestern Manitoba Expected to Come Close to bumper Yield of 1915.

Those who have friends in Western Canada will be anxious to learn of the conditions there, and will be interested in knowing that generally the crop prospect is very favorable. Cutting and harvesting have become general, and it is anticipated that the results which will appear when thrashing is completed will be highly satisfactory.

With the widely varying weather conditions that have prevailed in the different sections of the prairie provinces it would be impossible to forecast with any degree of accuracy as to how the crop is made. The Manitoba crop has held its own, and the outlook for the province as a whole is decidedly good.

With the exception of an area south and west of Brandon, grain crops in Manitoba continue to give promise of a good harvest, the best in fact for a number of seasons, reports the Canadian National Railways for the week ended July 22. Recent rains and favorable temperatures have improved conditions wonderfully.

Southwestern Manitoba will reap a harvest which will nearly equal the bumper harvest of 1915. Farmers in the district are very optimistic. The rye crop is exceptionally good; many fields will yield upwards of 30 bushels per acre. The fields are remarkably free of weeds, and the grasshopper menace, which has been evident in the southwestern portion of the province for the past three years, has been almost entirely obliterated. No damage has been done to the wheat crop by rust, and the oats crop will average more than 60 bushels to the acre.

In Saskatchewan there are large areas where the crops are excellent. In places where the prospects some few weeks ago were not encouraging, material change for the better is apparent. In these places unusually dry weather during a portion of the growing season kept the crops back, but what was most remarkable was the effect that the spring moisture had. While light in some places, this moisture kept sufficient strength in the growing crops to ensure a fair yield of a good quality of grain. This condition arises in the mid-central districts of the province.

The southern portions of the province have been exceptionally favored, reports showing that the yield of all grains will be wonderfully good. The crops of all Saskatchewan are a week or ten days later than those of Manitoba.

Conditions in Alberta are said to be good, especially in southern Alberta, where copious and plentiful showers came in time to give assurance of good paying yields. This applies to nearly all sections of that district.

Northern Alberta, or at least that portion of it lying within thirty miles of Edmonton, has suffered from lack of moisture, a very unusual thing for that district, where there is generally an abundance. As a result, the heavy yields of wheat, oats and barley for which the district is noted will show considerable falling off over past years. The grain, though, is of excellent quality and the yield will be fair.

Pasture is poor, and the hay crop will fall short of that of any previous year for quite an extended period.

On the whole, the prairie provinces of Western Canada will have a crop that will warrant the statement that it will prove satisfactory and remunerative.

Amundsen's Ultimate Object.

Captain Amundsen's plan is to make his base at Cape Barrow. From thence he proposes to cover by the air route the 1,275 miles to the North pole. His ultimate goal is Cape Columbia another 485 miles distant, making a total distance of 1,760 miles. As he will doubtless be compelled to deviate from the straight course, this estimates that he will cover approximately 2,000 miles. Just how he will recognize the actual pole is not quite clear, as it is not distinguished by any particular physical features. He will, however, be able to discover what chances there are for carrying out his projected drift in a vessel across the polar basin, which is his main purpose of flying over the top of the earth.

New Friends.

Calling upon a friend, the visitor found another visitor there in the person of the small granddaughter, Mary. Seated in her tiny rocker, playing with her doll, the little girl was apparently utterly oblivious of their conversation until it touched upon the death of a mutual acquaintance and the details of her burial, when suddenly the small voice piped up with, "Gran'mover, when you die I ain't goin' to bury you nor nothin'. I'm goin' to have you stuffed."

ALCOHOLIC DEATHS ON INCREASE

New York Medical Examiner Reports 89 Pct. Over 1920 and 27 Pct. Over 1921.

New York.—An increase of nearly 89 per cent in alcoholic deaths this year over those of 1920 and 27 per cent over 1921 has been reported by the chief medical examiner for New York. The report shows that eighty persons died of alcoholism in the first six months of this year. These include only victims who died without medical attention.

Dr. Charles Norris, medical examiner, said many others probably died of alcoholism who were attended by private physicians.

The total number of alcoholic deaths for 1921 totaled 127, or 33 less than the total will be for this year if the present rate is maintained.

Lucy Varney Decides

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

"Varney, the modern Midas." That's what the fellow writing in the Dispatch calls him. I don't know who Midas was. I guess I don't read the Bible as close as I should. But I should judge that he must have been pretty well off if he was anything like this George Varney.

It was John Varney who spoke, a third or fourth cousin of the Varney who had Midas' touch of gold. John had not prospered so. The Varney industry he had inherited as generously as George Varney, but with it a combination of shortsightedness and over-confidence that resulted in what John called "plumb bad luck." Now at fifty a season's bad crops had brought him face to face with the grim fact that after he had paid interest on his mortgage he would have to approach the winter and its needs with exactly $50 ahead.

Undoubtedly something had to be done and that without delay.

"If I was a mite younger I'd go up to the city and see this cousin George," John Varney told his daughter Lucy. "Seems as if any one that can make money so fast as he can ought to be able to show me how to get a little, too. If I had a son, now, I'd send him up there and get him to introduce himself as a kin of his and learn the game. I'd—"

"I'm sorry," said Lucy, as if she felt somehow her father blamed her for being a girl. "I'm sorry that I didn't go to normal and get a teacher's license so I should have been able to bring in real money. But somehow it always seemed I was needed at home."

"Don't fret about that," broke in the father. "It wasn't your fault, you wanted to have enough. But your mother and I always thought it was nice to see a girl kept at home, learning how to keep house, helping her own mother. That was my idea and I wouldn't have it otherwise."

The next day Lucy Varney surprised her father and mother into speechlessness when she appeared at breakfast in her blue serge suit and her neat "best" hat. She was ready, she said to go up to the city. She was going to see George Varney—not to beg money, but to get him to show her how to earn it. The city lay 200 miles away and Lucy intended defraying the expenses by money she had earned and saved from, taking magazine subscriptions among the farmers in the county. This would only be enough to take her to the city. She wouldn't come home until she had earned enough to pay her trip back and to tide over for the winter. So positive was she that this was the only thing to do that her parents acquiesced before they had had time to take in the situation completely. Neither father nor mother nor Lucy had ever been to the city. If Lucy had announced her intention of going to China or the South Sea Isles they could hardly have been more surprised.

Lucy waited at the office of the great money maker, George Varney, for two hours, and it was finally only the magic name of Varney on her printed card that she presented to the receiving clerk that secured for her an interview with Mr. Varney's private secretary. Three days later, after considerable insisting and promises not to keep Mr. Varney more than five minutes at the most, Lucy was granted an interview. She was made to understand that it was only because of her claim to relationship that such a privilege had been awarded.

Varney of the Midas touch rather enjoyed having his employees regard him as slightly eccentric—eccentric in a distinguished way. This reputation gave him privileges as to abruptness and unexpected decisions that might have been disputed in a man not so generally expected to act in an original manner.

"You mustn't be offended," warned the private secretary, ushering Lucy into Mr. Varney's room. "If he is abrupt with you, remember you have asked for this interview, and you must take the consequences."

So Lucy was in a measure prepared. She told her story simply and directly to Varney, so much interested in making it quite clear that neither she nor her father was asking for a gift or a loan, but only for an opportunity to earn the money needed, that she did not notice how closely the eccentric man scrutinized her, drawing his conclusions with the analysis of a detective.

"What are you trained to do?" asked Varney.

"Nothing," said Lucy.

"That is bad. Isn't there anything you do well?"

"I can cook and keep house. I believe I can make as good cake and pie and bread as any one in the county."

IS THE EARTH'S HOTTEST SPOT

Records Show That Death Valley, in California, Easily Bears That Questionable Distinction.

Ten years of record obtained at the United States weather bureau's sub-station at Greenland ranch, in Death valley, Calif., indicate that this is the hottest region in the United States, and so far as extreme maximum temperatures are concerned, the hottest known region on earth. The temperature of 134 degrees Fahrenheit, recorded on July 10, 1913, is believed by meteorologists to be the highest natural air temperature ever recorded with a tested standard thermometer exposed in the shade under approved conditions. High temperatures are common throughout the year, but the highest occur during midsummer. Precipitation is extremely light, the normal annual precipitation being less than two inches. Evaporation is excessive, as the relative humidity is especially low most of the time, and especially during the hot spells of summer.

Italy's Lignite Deposits. Italy has 30 known deposits of lignite, estimated to contain 281,000,000 tons of fuel available for industrial requirements.

I have taken first prizes at county fairs. You see, I never had a chance to go to normal school, but I could—"

"Stop talking," said George Varney. "I'm just opening my country place upstate a ways. We need a cook. You can cook. I'll give you a hundred dollars a month. A train leaves at noon. Go out now, and come back in half an hour. I'll have a letter to the housekeeper and a month's salary in advance and enough more to buy your ticket." Mr. Varney rose, indicating that the interview was over.

Lucy rose, but stood a moment. "But I thought you'd give me work in the office," she protested meekly enough. "You see—"

"You didn't think green office help was worth more than $25 a week, did you?"

"Oh, no," assured Lucy. "I'd begin for almost nothing. But—"

"You came asking me to show you how to earn money, and you tell me you know how to cook, but you don't know much else. I'm giving you a chance to earn money doing the thing you're trained to do. Do you accept my proposition, or don't you?"

Lucy blinked hard for a second or so, swallowed hard, and said "Yes."

As she boarded the north-bound train a few hours later Lucy felt no regrets, only surprise. No one in her family had ever worked as a servant, but, after all, she and her mother had spent a good share of their time in the kitchen, and the hundred dollars a month would be clear gain. The amount she would be able to send home every month quite surpassed her expectations.

The household at the Varney mountain home consisted of the housekeeper and five or six servants. Mr. George Varney, Jr., was the only member of the family who remained at home during the week. Every Friday night the senior Varney came to remain until Monday morning. Often he had business associates with him. The dishes Lucy prepared delighted the Varneys, father and son, as much as they surprised the servants. So she made no attempt to fathom the unfamiliar mysteries of a master chef's cookbook that the housekeeper gave her, which, said she, would show her how to make the sort of things "rich folk were accustomed to."

Instead of aspices and roulades and canapés and curries Lucy made doughnuts and layer cakes, feather-light bread, berry pies, dumpling stews—dishes on which the Varneys for generations had thrived.

The junior Varney, though he seemed to be on the best of terms with his father, was cast in a different mold. In his university days he had become engrossed in the study of sociology and economics. Flatly refusing to turn his knowledge and keen intellect to account in money making, he had accepted a post as professor in his university and was spending his first vacation in the preparation of his master's thesis. Though he was something of a dreamer, Lucy soon discovered that he was no idler. When she went quietly below stairs before the other servants at five o'clock in the morning to prepare hot bread for the early breakfast young Varney was always at work in his study.

At the end of two months Lucy and George Varney, Jr., had become the best of friends. By the end of the summer friendship had gradually matured into love. Lucy was engaged to the son of the Varney with the Midas touch.

The Saturday following the plighting of their troth the senior Varney appeared in the kitchen when Lucy was preparing breakfast.

He patted her on the back and then seized both her hands, though they were floury from some biscuits just under way.

"It was exactly my idea," he told her. "I wanted George to marry. George has a brilliant mind and a brilliant future. I don't quarrel with him over his choice of a career—but he'd got a lot of fool ideas in college. I knew he'd never marry any of the girls he's met. He's just enough of a socialist and a dreamer to steer clear of that sort of an alliance. So when you came in that morning I spotted you at once as the girl he'd select if he had a chance to find you for himself. If he found you working in the kitchen all the better."

"But how in the world did you decide it all so quickly?"

The elder Varney laughed. "The Varneys never were slow," he said. "By the way, it only took you two winks to decide to accept my offer."

Estimating Him.

"Say, listen, Daph," fluttered Flyppe Flapp, addressing the ticket seller of the Oriental Grotto movie palace. "What d'ye think of the hero in 'The Trail of the Serpent'?"

The aphorism, "He serves his party best who serves his country best" is from the inaugural address of Rutherford B. Hayes (1822-1893), as President of the United States, delivered March 5, 1877. In the famous translation of Homer's Iliad, made by Alexander Pope (1688-1744), the English poet, there is this line: "He serves me most who serves his country best."

HOME TOWN HELPS

EFFECTIVE PLEA FOR ZONING

Practically Impossible to Construct Proper Sewerage System Without Up-to-Date Arrangement.

The value of completely zoning a city or village is demonstrated in many ways. One of these is in the opportunity it gives the engineers to design and build sewer systems on precise information as to the character, number and use of buildings that will occupy the district which the sewer system is to serve.

The information derived from the zoning ordinance and the official maps will tell him in advance that the area to be drained is zoned, say, for a single-family district. This means to the engineer a smaller density of population, a smaller volume of sewage, shallower and smaller sewers.

Without zoning, the engineer is obliged to estimate the type and intensity of the development of any given district and design his sewers on the basis of his estimate.

If in his estimate he did not provide for large numbers of apartment buildings or hotels, requiring provision for a much greater volume of sewage and deeper basements to be drained, his sewers will be found to be inadequate to take care of the district as it finally develops.

The inadequate sewer is distressing and costly, as it means the backing up of the sewage into basements, involving the loss of property by flooding, the expense of cleaning out the filth and silt which are deposited after the water has seeped away and the menacing the health of occupants of the buildings.—From a Report of the Zoning Committee of the Western Society of Engineers.

NOT YET NATION OF RENTERS

Home Owning Is by No Means a Lost Ambition Among People of the United States.

Is home owning a lost ambition? Are we becoming a nation of cliff dwellers and renters? Not if we put faith in the figures compiled by the lately established bureau of housing of the Department of Commerce, observes the Nation's Business.

Of 68 cities of more than 100,000 population but 20 show a loss in percentage of homes owned between 1910 and 1920 (the figures are from the census bureau), and the losses are more than offset by the gains of the other 48. Of the 20 where losses were recorded, four, Detroit, Cleveland, St. Louis and Los Angeles, are in the first ten cities in point of population.

Although in New York more homes are owned than in any other city, the percentage is the lowest, but 12.7, yet even here the percentage has grown from 11.7 in 1910 and 12.1 in 1900. Manhattan presents the most striking situation. With more than half a million homes, less than 11,000 were owned, little more than 2 per cent.

If home owning be a form of civic virtue, then Des Moines may gather her chaste skirts about her as painted Manhattan passes, for the Iowa paragon among cities shows a percentage of home ownership of 51.2, a growth from 45.6 per cent in 1910 and 38.5 in 1900. In only one other community of more than 100,000 inhabitants are half the homes owned and that is Grand Rapids, Mich.

Old Houses Being Made Over.

An era of remodeling old houses runs across the entire country, according to Northwest lumbermen.

Following the building shortage of late years has come an appreciation that any house, old or new, has untold possibilities of alteration. Architects have been called upon to produce instances of "before and after" of ramshackle, barnlike structures made over into charming homes. Old barns have been rebuilt into studios, sheds and warehouses into residences of taste.

There is an enormous demand on the Northwest planing mills for moldings, trimmings, shingles, sidings, inside finishings, lumber and fancy grained fir, hemlock or cedar for cabinet work.

Lumbermen declare this demand has come from the alteration wave over the nation, repairing and adding built-in features.

How Zoning Saves Money.

It is estimated by the city engineer of the city of St. Louis that zoning would have saved the property owners about 15 per cent of the cost of sewer construction.

If this saving is true in the case of sewers, is it not equally true of the other services which combined make a mighty sum?

Painting Old Walls.

Old walls, especially of kitchens, have a thin layer of grease and smoke upon them that may not be perceptible but which will prevent paint from adhering properly. CLIENT "SPILLED THE BEANS"

Altogether Too Truthful in Answering Question Put to Him by His Own Attorney.

"Were I giving advice to a young lawyer," said an attorney the other day, "I would advise him to be careful about placing his client on the stand. It is at least as well to know what he is likely to answer to his attorney's leading questions. Some time ago," continued the lawyer, "a case was tried in which the plaintiff's attorney certainly 'spilled the beans,' though actually it was a cargo of bread, rolls and cake that was upset. A baker's wagon had been hit by a train in spite of the 'Stop, Look, Listen' sign, and the driver sued. On the stand he was asked how he conducted himself when he came to the crossing, and he replied: 'I just trotted gently across, looking the other way and thinking about nothing in particular.' The attorney threw up the case on the spot, but it was really a lack of foresight on his part," continued the narrator.
